Paper Tigers is a film that follows six high school students from Lincoln Alternative High School in Walla Walla, Washington where some of the students are emotionally stressed, living in danger and filled with pain. This film takes a close look at what is called Trauma-Informed Education, a movement that is showing incredible results in helping students struggling with the dark legacy of Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACE). Paper Tigers captures how their teachers, who were ready to try a new way of educating these struggling students and positively changing their lives forever.

“Many children in our schools are getting in trouble or falling behind because of child or adolescent trauma that is beyond their control. Paper Tigers brings these issues to light and provides a tangible solution to help these children make a complete change for the better,” said Georganne Benjamin, executive director of Optum Idaho.

A free public screening of Paper Tigers will be held on today (Wednesday), October 19 in Boise from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. MDT at Boise Centre on the Grove. Admission is free.

“Every school in every community has children who are suffering. By bringing this to light and addressing the problem in public, we are providing the opportunity to consider a new approach to helping our children,” said Shannon Decker, director of The Speedy Foundation.

The results of a Trauma-Informed Education speak for themselves. Lincoln Alternative High School former principal Jim Sporleder was able to turn his school around by dramatically decreasing out-of-school suspensions, increasing graduation rates and students going on to get a post secondary education.

“We are fortunate to have this feature film in our community and make it available for parents, teachers, health care providers and community members,” said Benjamin.

The film is free to all those who want to attend and a panel discussion will immediately follow. Please make not that the film does contain profanity and may not be suitable for young children.
